

Patricia Anderson

patricia.anderson@utoronto.ca

Patricia was born in Buenos Aires, Argentina and has lived in Sao Paulo, München, and Toronto. She studied psychology at the Universidad de Belgrano, where she received her degree in 1992. After moving to Canada, she earned a Masters degree in History from the University of Toronto. She is currently working on the final draft of her doctoral dissertation, which examines the rise of female sports in Argentina during the early twentieth century. She will be defending her dissertation shortly at the same University. Patricia has many years of teaching experience at the undergraduate level. She has participated extensively at both local and international conferences. Some of her work has been published in international journals. Patricia's interests lie in social and gender history and she enjoys teaching.